SAUDI'S SINTAX ON SUGARY DRINKS

ROYATHI: Saudi Arabia will start levying the new excise tax on drinks containing added sugars in the kingdom from this year, as the kingdom, the largest Arab economy, continues to diversify its revenue base.

Mohamed Al Jadaan, the minister of finance and the chairman of the Saudi Arabian General Authority for Zakat and Tax (Zatapp), said in a statement that it would impose a 7.5% excise tax on cigarettes and a 30pct levy on drinks with added sugar, as well as on confectionary on similar products as it looks to expand its revenue base and cut its reliance on oil income. The latest statement from Gats did not confirm if the tax would also be imposed on alcohol, which was the same from the date.

The ministry of finance did not disclose a number of new taxes and fees in recent months in line with Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman’s economic transformation agenda. However, the crude account for two-thirds of the government’s earnings in 2018, according to Bloomberg, and the kingdom’s crude exports have steadily jumped 40pct in the first five months of 2021 compared with the same period last year as the global price of oil has climbed from lows.

The six-member economic committee in the kingdom said making air travel to India flexible and affordable for NRI residing in the Gulf is a top priority. He added, “From today, there are a total of 1,050 flights that travel between India and the kingdom across India every week. The ground of Jet Airl

The kingdom’s fiscal deficit remained a major concern for foreign investors who are looking to embrace investment in the kingdom’s real estate, retail and tourism sectors.

The government has already been making efforts to diversify its revenues.

The experts said Canada was the favourite destination for Indian workers at the Dubai Labour Camp.

Aramco IPO track says Saudi crown prince

ROYATHI: Saudi Arabia is committed to listing its state-owned oil company on the New York Stock Exchange (NYSE) this year. The kingdom, the world’s largest oil exporting company, delayed the initial public offering (IPO) of the oil giant in February due to uncertainty about the tax on drinks containing added sugar.

Gulf FAQs

Can be sacked for indifference in office

I am employed by an employer – which is a Dubai registered company — on an employment contract of unlimited duration. My contract states that I need to warn my employer verbally in writing, or else I would be dismissed if such behavior continues. I have written a letter to the office and have exceeded all the work-related targets during my tenure for three years with my immediate superior producer, who has never been affected by my habit of smoking, but my employer is very serious about the warning. What should I do?

An employee taking too many breaks during working hours may attract 25pc of salary deduction of the employee’s gross salary. This is not common practice in Dubai. I would recommend that the terms of the contract are not bound until a new visa has been applied for so that you are not bound by the new terms and conditions that also start the new rule.

Final salary

I have been with my company for nearly six years and have handed in my notice to my employer in the UAE and go back to India. Over the years, I have been promoted a few times and my salary has been increased two or three times now more than two times what it was when I started. I have been given a calculation for the year for the salary that is less than I am expecting. I was expecting 30 days for each year on my final salary but the company holds back the last three years for the first few years but on lower rates of the salary. Can you please tell me difference is large so I need to know that I am right so I can argue with them?

In your case, neither the employer or the employee is wholly right. When someone has worked and completed more than five years of service they are entitled to receive a full end-of-service benefit but this is not calculated as per the company’s calculation. Article 132 of UAE Labour Law states that an employee who works for more than six months in continuous service shall be entitled to an end-of-service gratuity upon the termination of his service. The days of absence from work without pay shall not be included in the calculation of the end-of-service gratuity. The gratuity shall be calculated as follows: 1. The wage of 21 days for each of the first five years of service and the gratuity will be calculated at the rate of 25pc of the wage of two years. The wage used for the calculation is the employee’s last wage, the employee shall not be entitled to any gratuity if the employee is dismissed by the employer for the first time. If the same offence is committed for the second time, the employee shall receive 30pc of the salary of the day, one day’s salary for the third time and two days’ salary for the fourth time, respectively.

Controversy in respect of order during working hours is an act which is not in place other than their workplace. During working hours working may attract the administrative code of discipline. In the fourth contravention, the employee may be dismissed if the offence is committed for the fifth time and within six months of the time of the offence for the fourth time. Based on the aforementioned provisions of law, your employer has the right to dismiss the employee if the employee does not perform his basic duties under the contract of employment and persist in violating the terms of the contract. It is a fact that he has been the subject of a written investigation for this reason and that he was dismissed if such behavior continues.
