New no agency could in the heart's artery walls. Furthermore, South Asian men of cardiovascular disease, particularly in men from South Asia, are known to have a high chance of death due to this disease. Calcium is a critical nutrient that helps maintain the structure and function of teeth and bones. A diet that is rich in calcium can help prevent bone loss, reduce the risk of fractures, and improve bone health.

The study analyzed the national mortality data from 2015 to 2017 to understand the patterns of calcium intake and its association with the mortality rate from cardiovascular disease. The results showed a positive correlation between calcium intake and reduced risk of mortality from cardiovascular disease. The study also found that countries with higher calcium intake had a lower mortality rate from cardiovascular disease.

The researchers concluded that higher calcium intake could significantly reduce the risk of mortality from cardiovascular disease. They recommended that policymakers and public health officials promote the consumption of calcium-rich foods to improve cardiovascular health. The study also emphasized the need for further research to understand the mechanisms by which calcium intake affects cardiovascular health and to develop strategies to increase calcium intake in at-risk populations.
